Ben primarily represents clients in complex product liability and other tort matters, often defending designers, manufacturers, and distributors against high exposure product defect and warnings claims.

He has assisted clients in achieving successful outcomes—whether through early case resolution, motion practice, or trial—in cases involving, among other products:

- * Automobiles
- * Automotive Components
- * Motorcycles
- * ATVs
- * Industrial Machinery
- * Power Tools
- * Consumer Products
- * Medical Devices

His work in these cases covers all phases of litigation, from initial claim investigation and assessment through trial. He regularly collaborates with subject matter experts to understand the product and injury at issue and formulates innovative and practical strategies to efficiently meet client goals.

In addition to litigating cases in both state and federal trial courts, Ben has drafted and prepared appellate briefs. He also advises clients on issues of product safety, compliance with applicable standards, and implementing safety measures.

Outside of his product liability and tort practice, Ben represents clients in commercial disputes and business litigation, has assisted in environmental matters (related to litigation, regulatory, and permitting issues), and has worked with and defended railroad and maritime clients.
