A Year-End Roundup of USED Rulemaking Activity

Webinar

The U.S. Department of Education has made significant progress this year towards the completion of its ambitious regulatory plan. In the last three months alone, the agency has published two, complex final rules that cover a wide range of topics - and more are expected soon.

On December 17, 2019, Aaron Lacey will provide an overview of the status and substance of the Department's rulemaking activity, with a focus on developments that have, or could have, near-term impact for institutions of higher education. Aaron will cover the final borrower defense, accreditation, and state authorization rules promulgated this fall, and discuss the distance education and Title IX rules on the horizon.
