The “Key Personnel” Requirement in Government Solicitations

Webinar

Government solicitations for services frequently include a requirement to identify key personnel who will work on the awarded contract. If so, offerors may be required to also include resumes and letters of commitment for each person proposed in the specified key personnel position(s), and the proposed key personnel usually will be considered as part of the solicitation’s evaluation criteria. This webinar will address key personnel requirements and how they are impacted by agency decisions to award with or without discussions, procurement delays, protests, and agency corrective action decisions.

This webinar will cover:

- Key personnel requirements in solicitations
- Impacts of discussions, delays, protests, and corrective action
- Offeror and government obligations regarding availability of key personnel
- Key personnel substitutions
- State of the law (protest decisions) related to key personnel requirements
