Thompson Coburn's Dallas office was established in 2020. This office houses experienced attorneys who serve a wide variety of industries, including financial services, media and internet, agriculture and food, health care, energy and more.

Serving a diverse pool of clients, our Dallas office represents major corporations, banks, and hospitals. We help navigate state and federal litigation and appeals, white collar investigations and defense, health care transactions and regulatory issues, and bankruptcy litigation, among other key practices. With a former appeals court justice and a state senator as part of our team, our connections across Texas run deep.

The founding partners of our Dallas office are a prime example of the firm's commitment to impactful civic and charitable endeavors. In a high-profile pro bono effort covered by major media and featured in a documentary film, Dallas attorneys Elizabeth Myers and Jenny Ecklund represented sexual assault survivors in a federal class action against the Austin Police Department and the Travis County District Attorney's Office over alleged failures in the investigation and prosecution of sexual assaults.
